Keys to the Streets. Program designed to re-image how 'orphaned' space is used in the city

EMILY JACKSON
emily.jackson@metronews.ca

GP Mendoza wiped rain off the polka-dotted piano bench before sitting to play a ditty he wrote on the spot.

Passersby on the seawall near the Cambie Bridge paused to catch the impromptu concert on a rainy Thursday morning, bemused by the piano's unusual placement by the Spyglass ferry dock.

"It could go for a tune-up," Mendoza joked after his performance, pulling a cover on the instrument donated by a Craigslist user who otherwise would have sent it to the dump.

Stay tuned for more of these mini gigs, Vancouverites. This piano and two others are here to stay until Aug. 24 as part of the inaugural Keys to the Streets program.

The program is all about re-imaging the way "orphaned" space is used in the city, said Mendoza, the project lead.

"We can start being inspired on our everyday walks to work by something as simple as a piano," he said.

Creekside Community Centre and Robson Park will also host pianos, and the Vancouver Public Space Network will truck the polka-dotted piano to Robson Square for its official launch Tuesday.

Run by City Studio, a collaboration between the city and its six post-secondary institutions, the street pianos emulate the "Play Me, I'm Yours" project started in Britain in 2008.

The idea spread to dozens of cities across the world, including Toronto, New York and Barcelona. When 41 pianos graced Toronto's streets in 2012, they only struck the wrong chord with a handful of residents roused by late-night solos.

There's a code of conduct that involves respecting noise bylaws, Mendoza said. At a one-day test run at McAuley Park in April, people and businesses alike loved the public piano and were sad to see it go.

Liberals targeting new cuts

'It's going to be tough.'
Finance minister wants $30 million in spending reductions to maintain budget surplus

Finance Minister Mike de Jong tables the budget in the legislative assembly Thursday in Victoria.
CHAD HIPOLITO/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Finance Minister Mike de Jong says the post-election budget he tabled Thursday reflects darkening economic horizons, but he's still forecasting three years of budget surpluses.

De Jong said he's looking to find $30 million in government spending cuts to help preserve the current year's budget surplus, which now is forecast to hit $153 million, down from his budget forecast last February of a surplus of $197 million.

He suggested finding $30 million in savings from the government's $44-billion total budget is comparable to a family earning $60,000 finding savings of $42.

De Jong said the government is shrinking its surplus forecasts until its 2015-16 budget, but despite the reductions the numbers are still in the black as opposed to most other provinces that are facing massive deficits.

The Liberal government's 2014-15 budget surplus estimate now is at $154 million from the $211-million forecast last February, and the 2015-16 forecast of a $460-million surplus now is estimated to be a surplus of $446 million.

"The next 12 to 18 months are going to be tough. It's going to be tough," de Jong said. "This isn't great news."

But he said the government is going to use the time to put in place the fundamentals to ensure an economic recovery, primarily kick-started by plans to develop natural-gas extraction in northeast B.C. and export the gas in the form of liquefied natural gas from northwest B.C. to markets in Asia.

The government believes the development of LNG projects represents a trillion-dollar economic opportunity that could create 100,000 jobs and help the province pay down its debt, which currently is at more than $62 billion and forecast to rise.

One of the few positive numbers in the budget involves forecasts of rising natural-gas prices, which are now at about $2.65 a gigajoule, up from February's prices of about $1.90 a gigajoule.

Natural-gas revenues are forecast to reach $397 million this year, up from $169 million last year. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Burnaby residents entertain pipeline pitch

Kinder Morgan vowed to keep its urban footprint small as it rolled out proposed routes for its Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project to residents Thursday.

The oil giant held an open house at the Executive Inn at 4201 Lougheed Hwy. to outline its routing options for the proposed twinning.

While planners tried to adhere to the existing pipeline (operating since 1953) as much as possible, urban development in Burnaby, Coquitlam and Surrey have made that virtually impossible.

For example, the current pipeline leaves the Burnaby terminal and cuts east through Coquitlam. The proposed primary route for the second pipeline sees it travel south from the terminal along the Lougheed Highway.

"There's been a lot of development along that route since it was built 60 years ago," said Michael Davies, senior director of engineering and marine development on the project, during a media preview of the presentation. "Following existing railway corridors or the Lougheed Highway in the long run will be less impactful."

MATT KIELTYKA/METRO

Greg Toth, senior project director, said construction in urban areas would mostly just affect traffic for short periods of time.

Kinder Morgan is using the open houses to help finalize its facilities application, which it hopes to file with the National Energy Board by the end of the year.

If approved, the contentious project would start construction in 2017 at the earliest — adding 980 kilometres of new pipeline from Edmonton to Burnaby.

More than 75 per cent of the proposed project would run along the existing pipeline route.

However, two reported spills along the current route in the previous two weeks aren't helping the company win the public's heart.

Kinder Morgan confirmed Thursday that 20 to 25 barrels of oil have spilled 40 kilometres east of Hope due to a "small defect" in the pipeline.

"The employees of Kinder Morgan are as disappointed as anyone," said Toth, insisting current technology and integrity maintenance programs make both the existing pipeline and proposed expansion safe.

If approved, the project would increase the pipeline's capacity to 890,000 barrels per day from 300,000 and boost tanker traffic through Vancouver's port to 408 per year from 32. MATT KIELTYKA/METRO

Tours are brewing in Vancouver

Hop to it.

Micro-brewery, beer tourism industry on tap?

Move over, Portland: Vancouver is giving the craft beer capital a run for its money as two local businesses have started offering day tours of the city's booming micro-brewery industry.

Local adventure company WildSide began running bus tours twice a week about a month ago, and through a SocialShopper deal sold 250 seats in just a day and a half. Their weekend tours are now sold out until September, and their Wednesday outings are also filling up quickly.

Two weeks ago, entrepreneur and craft-beer aficionado Ryan Mackey followed suit, providing three-hour group tours on his 12-person bus. Both companies are tapping into opportunities made possible by the province's decision in February to allow breweries to have tasting rooms and lounges licensed for selling samples.

"There are definitely more breweries than there ever have been before. It's definitely exploding," said Brahm Candy, co-founder and guide with WildSide Vancouver, whose six-hour sojourns sell for $55.

His bus visits a rotating roster of breweries, with a focus on diversity, showcasing the old to the brand new, nano- to mid-size, and everything in between.

"We want it to be cool enough, affordable enough, and fun enough for locals to do, and then we know anyone else will love to do them," he explained.

Metro got to take a walk with WildSide this week and, wouldn't you know it, midway through the day ran into Chris Bjerrisgaard, marketing director for Craft Beer Week, who happened to be saddling up to the bar at Parallel 49.

He said there have long been discussions of pushing Vancouver as a beer-tourism destination — something that's been done in Victoria and Portland for years.

"If we're really going to push being a beer-tourism city with some of the best in the world, then we need to provide these services along with just having the breweries," he said of the recent startups. "This may be one of the first years that we've been ready to actually do it legitimately."

That's great news for the dozens of established craft brewers in and around Vancouver, something the six more opened or opening this year can all drink to.

A walk on the WildSide

The nice part about WildSide is that it attracts an incredibly diverse group of locals, from those in their 20s to their 70s — some with knowledge to impart along the ride, and others clearly just there to imbibe (and, confidential to single guys: Wednesday's tour group of 20 was about 75 per cent women).

Our first stop was Granville Island Brewing, a place many of us had been before to grab a pint or two, but which few had toured behind the scenes before.

This was where we learned the difference between an ale and a lager (cheat sheet/spoiler: It's the type of yeast and whether it's top-brewed or bottom-brewed), a hop and a malt. We also got up close to a grist hopper, a mash mixer and some very heavy-duty-looking fermenters.

Then it was on to Bridge Brewing Company, a tiny, one-year-old nano-brewery that produced mainly just one beer, and brews it well: Their hop-forward North Shore Pale Ale.

With growlers full, we then made our way to Parallel 49 on Triumph Street, a bustling spot in East Vancouver's burgeoning industrial-craft-brewery district.

This is where I found my favourite, easy-drinking brew of the day — Mystery Lager — an experimental concoction that came as sweet relief to my hop-wary palette.

Judging by the growlers our boisterous group left with, however, they clearly favoured the more hop-heavy Gypsy Tears.

Last stop was Pat's Pub and Brewhouse on the Downtown Eastside — a recently-renovated 100-year-old brewpub steeped in local history, once having housed legendary jazz pianist Jelly Roll Morton, and also a boxing ring.

We finished our samples there with a sweet treat: Cannery Brewing's blackberry porter. It was dark and delicious, and judging by the smiles on everyone's faces, the perfect end to the day.

Closed to cars till Labour Day. Cedar patio, dubbed Corduroy Road, shut down for fourth summer in a row

emily.jackson@metronews.ca

Construction workers installing cedar benches stained pink, yellow and green in the middle of Robson Square interrupted an otherwise dreary Thursday morning commute.

The cedar patio, named Corduroy Road after old plank and log roads used in the Pacific Northwest, will replace cars until Labour Day in front of the Vancouver Art Gallery between Howe and Hornby Streets.

It's the fourth year VIVA Vancouver has shut the street to vehicles and turned it into a pedestrian plaza during the summer months, giving people the chance to lounge in the heart of downtown.

Designed by landscape architects at Hapa Collaborative and Fricia Construction, the benches follow 2012's beanbag chairs constructed with old sails from Canada Place and 2011's fake beach.

Chances are the benches will be easier to maintain and clean than the beanbags and the beach where some chose to sleep in previous years. It costs about $50,000 to construct and monitor the summer programs.

While the annual closure sparks irritation in some drivers and West End seniors whose bus is rerouted, pedestrians have filled the square year after year. Many paused to snap pictures of the half-complete installation before work, with a few pausing for respite under the giant yellow umbrellas.

The closure is part of the city's strategy to encourage people to get out of their cars and onto sidewalks, bikes and buses. The city will monitor how the closure affects traffic and congestion in the downtown core. Organizations such as the Vancouver Public Space Network advocate for a permanent closure of the space.

Vancouver lends Calgary a hand

Thirty members of Vancouver's Heavy Urban Search and Rescue team travelled to Calgary Thursday to assist with ongoing flood relief and recovery efforts.

HUSAR will help for 10 to 14 days with the support of the province.

"We will continue to co-ordinate closely with the City of Calgary and Mayor Nenshi's office to ensure that Vancouver is doing everything possible to support Calgary's significant recovery efforts in the days, weeks and months ahead," Mayor Gregor Robertson said. EMILY JACKSON/METRO

BC Hydro. 5 workers fired over grow-op allegations

BC Hydro has fired five employees for allegedly helping marijuana grow-ops steal energy.

The terminations resulted from an investigation into 18 employees, linemen from across the province, regarding theft of equipment and facilitation of the theft of electricity, according to a statement on Thursday from BC Hydro's Greg Reimer, executive vice-president of transmission and distribution.

"We have provided information to the RCMP and they will determine whether or not to pursue a criminal investigation," Reimer said. "We hope that the activities of a very small number of individuals do not overshadow the hard work and dedication of our employees who work every day to safely keep the lights on in British Columbia."

Three other employees are still under investigation while 10 have returned to work.

When the union first heard the accusations last week, it dubbed the investigation a "witch hunt" in a statement from Local 258 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers business manager Doug McKay. The workers were just doing their jobs, McKay said at the time, adding BC Hydro seemed to have "more questions than hard evidence." EMILY JACKSON/METRO

The region's mayors have officially announced their opposition to B.C.'s plans for a TransLink funding referendum.

Mayors say no to referendum

Resolution. Province wants voters to make decision on TransLink funding options

Greater Vancouver mayors have announced their formal opposition to the province's plan to hold a referendum on transit funding in 2014.

The Mayors' Council on Regional Transportation has sent letters to Premier Christy Clark and new Transportation Minister Todd Stone, arguing it would be divisive to ask voters to make such a complex policy decision.

The region is expecting a million more people by 2030 and the mayors want the province to approve new funding sources to pay for multibillion-dollar infrastructure projects, such as a rapid-transit line along the Broadway corridor in Vancouver and light rail in Surrey. All of TransLink's current funding sources, such as gas taxes and fares, are maxed out.

"Referenda are tools without context and would be divisive to the region ... (and) making complex policy by referenda is contrary to principles of good governance," reads the council's resolution, which was passed during a June 19 meeting.

At that same meeting, council chair Richard Walton gave a presentation on road pricing, which many of the mayors seem to favour. Walton reported on how Stockholm held a retroactive referendum after rush-hour congestion pricing was tested in a yearlong pilot project. Voters decided to keep the system.

The road-pricing scheme reduced rush-hour traffic by up to 25 per cent, he said, and raised $1.5 billion per year for transportation.

Stone was sitting in the legislature Thursday and unable to comment by Metro's deadline. KATE WEBB/METRO

One day in jail for Stanley Cup rioter

A woman who admitted to taking part in the Stanley Cup riot has been handed a one-day jail term, which amounts to time served, for violating conditions of a suspended sentence imposed last year.

Camille Cacnio was arrested during a traffic stop in Vancouver in January. She was accused of breaking her curfew and drinking, both violations of the two-year suspended sentence she received after pleading guilty to participating in the June 2011 riot.

Car thefts. Craigslist posts lead to suspected scammer

Police have arrested a Vancouver man for allegedly stealing cars and selling them on Craigslist with fake vehicle identification numbers.

The man stole at least three vehicles and registered them with false VINs he obtained from scrapped cars to fool buyers wary of the vehicles' histories, police said.

The investigation started in April when a car-theft victim recognized his Toyota 4Runner in an online posting. Police determined it was being sold with a VIN from a scrapped truck of the same age.

In June, the suspect allegedly struck again with a Toyota Tacoma bearing a VIN from a truck destroyed by fire and a Mazda Protegé with a VIN from a car totalled in a collision in another province.

Police believe other stolen vehicles have been advertised on Craigslist and sold.

To avoid buying a vehicle with a stolen VIN, police recommend checking for an altered VIN on the dashboard or an altered Canadian Safety Standard Decal on the driver's side door post. The two numbers should match.

Calgary mayor blasts CP Rail after bridge failure

'Looking for a lot of answers'. Mayor Naheed Nenshi and CP CEO Hunter Harrison agree to work more on safety together in the future

Calgary's mayor says Canadian Pacific Railway has apologized for the chaos caused by a train that derailed after a bridge over the swollen Bow River failed.

Naheed Nenshi says he's had a conversation with CP CEO Hunter Harrison and they both agreed to work together more on safety.

Nenshi lashed out at CP earlier in the day, suggesting the company did a poor job inspecting its bridge after a recent flooding.

"How is it we don't have regulatory authority over this, but it's my guys down there risking their lives to fix it?" Nenshi asked earlier Thursday.

"Certainly once this crisis is over, I'll be looking for a lot of answers from a lot of people. When was that bridge inspected? Why was it not inspected after Saturday? Remember, on Saturday the Bow River was still running higher than anyone had ever seen in their lifetimes," Nenshi said.

"I'll be very blunt. I'll probably get in trouble for saying this," Nenshi added. "We've seen a lot of people lose their jobs at CP over the last year. How many bridge inspectors did they fire?"

Harrison said the bridge's failure is as "extraordinary" as the heavy rains and flooding in southern Alberta.

Liability. Propane company found guilty in massive 2008 explosion

An Ontario company was convicted Thursday of violating environmental and labour regulations in connection with the 2008 explosion of a propane plant in Toronto that killed a man and forced thousands from their homes.

Sunrise Propane and its directors, Shay Ben-Moshe and Valery Belahov, were found guilty of nine charges in relation to the early-morning blast.

The court ruled Sunrise failed to provide safety training and a safe working environment, discharged a contaminant and contravened a number of provincial orders related to the cleanup after the blast.

The court also found Ben-Moshe and Belahov failed to take all reasonable care to prevent the company from flouting those orders.

Sunrise defence lawyer Leo Adler said both he and his clients were disappointed with the verdict, which could amount to millions of dollars in fines for the company.

Ontario government lawyers argued training negligence contributed to the blast that killed employee Parminder Saini, 25, and rained debris on the surrounding area. Bob Leek, 55, a firefighter who responded to the emergency on his day off, also died of a heart attack.

According to the government, the initial blast occurred when propane vapours ignited during a risky truck-to-truck transfer.

Harvin Pitch — lead counsel in a class action representing members of the community — said his clients were delighted by Thursday's ruling.

"It's very helpful to have a verdict that the judge recognizes the negligence on the part of Sunrise and its officers," he said, adding that his clients could be entitled to a collective multi-million dollar settlement.

The court will reconvene July 23 to set a date for the sentencing. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Quebec

Feds a step closer to eliminating long-gun registry

The Harper government has won the latest round in its battle to delete the last remaining portion of the federal long-gun registry.

Quebec's highest court has ruled against the provincial government there, as it fights to keep data for the province from being destroyed as it has elsewhere.

The Quebec Court of Appeal said the province has no right to the registry data.

The registry could, in theory, be destroyed in two weeks. The ruling said the government must wait that long before deleting the Quebec data.

Revolution 2.0 for Egypt?

Egyptians watch President Mohammed Morsi's televised speech at a bar in Cairo, Wednesday. All eyes are on Egypt as the country is set once again for massive protests, expected on Sunday. MANU BRABO/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A nation in a state of agitation. Unrest in Egypt could reach a tipping point Sunday, the 1-year anniversary of Brotherhood rule

deena.douara@metronews.ca

Two days after I arrive in Cairo to see family earlier this month, my uncle whisks me away to a protest at the Ministry of Culture.

That's Egypt today, protests have become a family affair. With this weekend marking the one-year anniversary of the Muslim Brotherhood taking power, you worry about the safety of loved ones.

This particular protest on June 11 turns out to be a shi-shi demonstration in a wealthy Cairo neighbourhood. President Mohammed Morsi has replaced the culture minister and others with Muslim Brotherhood members. Many criticize the changes as crude and corrupt, though others suggest he must excise old officials to begin anew.

I lived in Egypt for five years until 2009, and visited again months after the 2011 revolution. It was a time of uncertainty and insecurity, but also of some optimism and rebuilding. That has all but vanished.

The one-year anniversary is Sunday. Protests have already begun and bloodshed is expected. People are asking if we'll become like Syria? Could Salafis win an election? What of the plummeting economy and security?

On a stage outside the ministry, a Tahrir Square protest singer performs a call-and-response song. Artists and intellectuals dot the crowd.

Individuals stand between cars with petitions calling for early elections and people honk in support.

The next day, I eye a young man in the women's-only metro car with suspicion. After other vendors pass, he rallies the women to demonstrate on the 30th. There will be bussing to three sites and if they can't go, then protest in front of your home, he insists. "Don't be afraid," he yells, repeatedly. A woman tells the rest to say "Amen."

Another woman confronts him, telling him that we all know where his support really comes from. Other passengers are pragmatic. "We have to give (Morsi) time, we need stability."

Days later, on the metro again, a woman calls for signatures. "Everyone's signed by now," a passenger tells her. Arguments erupt across the evening car.

I was with a friend when a stylish young woman said she wouldn't sign — she and her husband work in tourism and just as things are getting to normal, protests threaten their livelihoods.

I walk with a friend the next day around Old Cairo. An older man mutters to nobody that Morsi will be good for the country so there will be fewer people like us around. Tourists? Women? Women without a headscarf? Only the disdain is understood.

When I take a cab home with a woman already inside, it's clear they've been discussing politics. The driver asks if I've signed the petition. I hesitate and they wonder aloud if perhaps my father is Brotherhood. He is not. Later when I jot in my notepad, he half-jokingly suspects I'm recording their information.

The woman doesn't know whether to blame Morsi or the revolution for unemployment that's driven young neighbours to drug addiction. The driver, too, had lost his job as a government staffer. When she says the old regime was better, the driver disagrees: he says the 30th had better not mean bringing back the old.

In my last days I visit conservative relatives and wonder whether they support the Brotherhood. I learn they don't — my cousin thinks Morsi is incompetent, idiotic, and deceitful (the most common criticism against the Brotherhood). But he thinks things could get much worse. The opposition have no plan, no candidate. Blood will be shed, and for what? He fears that old regime sympathizers or paid thugs will be among protesters, even posing as Brotherhood, to incite violence.

I leave Egypt confused. And worried. I have family members on the front lines. Relatives have lost everything in the plunging economy and once-proud Egyptians are witnessing the decline of their country as it's torn along religious and sectarian lines.

And I wait to see what will become of Egypt's second – perhaps — revolution in my lifetime.

CRTC gives green light to Astral deal

Second time around. Bell's revised takeover bid approved after firm promises to sell some specialty TV channels and radio stations

Coveted content

- Bell's parent company, BCE Inc., has said it wants to buy Astral to put its content across traditional TV, computers, smartphones and tablets.
- Astral's English pay TV service, The Movie Network, and French-language pay TV service Super Ecran would be key providers of shows and movies.

Bell has won regulatory approval for its second bid to buy Astral Media and its coveted suite of TV speciality channels and radio stations in a deal worth $3.4 billion.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission announced its decision Thursday after markets closed.

The CRTC rejected Bell's initial bid for Astral last fall, saying it wasn't in the best interests of Canadians.

But the regulator said the revised bid — in which Bell agreed to sell some of Astral's specialty TV channels and radio stations — satisfied its concerns that the company would be too dominant in the market.

"The commission concludes that the transaction as modified in this decision is in the public interest and advances the objectives set out for the Canadian broadcasting system in the (Broadcasting) Act," the CRTC said in its decision.

The Public Interest Advocacy Centre, which acted as counsel for a number of consumer groups and opposed the bid, said it too was disappointed by the CRTC's decision.

"Canada will now have an unprecedented level of media concentration and vertical integration and a weaker diversity of voices with the loss of Astral, a strong independent broadcaster," Janet Lo, a lawyer for the advocacy group, said in a statement. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Eiffel Tower reopens following 2-day strike

France's Eiffel Tower has reopened after a rare two-day workers' strike. The union representing most of the Eiffel Tower's 300 workers called the walkout Tuesday during negotiations this week over salary raises, the company profit-sharing policy and other issues. The 124-year-old tower gets about 25,000 tourists daily — like the couple seen in this photo on a rainy day this past May. Though it is scheduled to be open every day, it occasionally closes because of suicide threats, bomb threats — or strikes. FRED DUFOUR/AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Retail. Rona to close 11 stores in Ontario, B.C.

Planned closures

- The three B.C. stores — in Duncan, Kamloops and Abbotsford — will shut down in October.

Rona plans to close 11 of its money-losing stores in two provinces, as well as cut more administrative jobs and trim its marketing budget in an effort to boost its financial results.

After years of efforts to address eroding profits, newly installed CEO Robert Sawyer said his restructuring plan creates a simplified business structure and a more agile company, and it should be the last cost-cutting exercise needed to turn the company around.

"It's enough of restructuring," he said Thursday. "Going forward, we're there to do business. We're there to increase our sales and we're there to give satisfaction to customers." THE CANADIAN PRESS

1 Oh Canada (Say whaa?). CBC Music wanted to spice up our country's national anthem for Canada Day, so they recruited domestic beat boxer KRNFX, national vocal treasure Maiko Watson, and seasoned producer Ian Blackwood. The result is a righteous hip-hop groove for young Liberals and New Democrats alike. Check them out on YouTube, yo! One time (one time).

2 Smart screen. Research from the University of London ends a tradition of lies parents perpetuated about the harmful effects of TV. The study revealed that kids who watched more did better in school than their more moderate-viewing counterparts. Subsequent studies also showed that your dog likely did not retire to a ranch, your face will not stay like that, and no matter how many times you do it, you will not go blind!

3 Oh, Paula. What kind of world do we live in when we can't throw a simple plantation-style wedding complete with black servants, or abuse ethnic employees without being labelled "racist"? It's like getting arrested for fraud, and pleading "not guilty," saying, "Hey, I'm just a drug dealer."

4 Boyfriend. Media reports show that Biebs is taking his bad-ass image to the next level by publicly making out with a married woman. At 22 years old, Jordan Ozuna has been separated almost as long as she was married, but she is still married, according to her estranged mother-in-law. Yet, she fools around with Biebs.

5 Growing up Kardashian. Despite endowing their child with the moniker of North West, sources close to the couple say that Kim and Kanye are wonderful parents. Kim says she enjoys being a mother. Sure, it's tough, waking up in the middle of the day, supervising the nanny, looking out for possible allergies to fruits or nuts, or unnatural fabrics, but as long as she can hold her baby, for just a few minutes before each mani-pedi, it's all worth it.

6 C'est la Vie. This week in 1974, French crooner Charles Aznavour hit No. 1 in the U.K. with She. At 50, he was the oldest living male to top the charts in Britain. Even though his own peeps didn't go for it, the song became a classic and was covered 25 years later by Elvis Costello for the movie Notting Hill.

7 The Iron Sheik. Old-school wrestling fans will remember Hulk Hogan's notorious nemesis. Hossein Khosrow Vaziri, former Olympic wrestler and bodyguard for the Shah of Iran, has an incredible story. Persian-Canadian brothers Jian and Page, a.k.a. The Magen Boys, have been gathering footage for years and a powerful film has emerged. To learn about the upcoming documentary and this fascinating man, visit indiegogo.com for the Iron Sheik Story.

8 Busting balls. This week, the now-former New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez was charged with first-degree murder, and Cleveland Browns rookie Ausar Walcott was charged with attempted murder, making a grand total of 36 NFL players to be arrested this year. League officials are up in arms about the allegations, but I think the problem is obvious. Cops just prefer basketball.

Bandcamp is a website that boasts a limitless selection of music you can buy directly from the artist, with the added bonus of allowing you to preview songs in full before you buy. Here are a few Canadian artists worth a listen.

Jim Guthrie

Isosine
Mashup Manifesto II: Tossed-off collisions like Nine Inch Nails and Carly Rae Jepsen are giving mashups a dirty name. But Isosine's experiments are lovingly nurtured enough to pull off using a Nicki Minaj beat to turn The Proclaimers' 500 Miles into a sweet Top 40 ballad. (isosine.bandcamp.com)

Synopsis

Channing Tatum plays John Cale, a divorced father of one who desperately wants to impress his daughter Emily (Joey King) by getting a job as security for the president of the United States (Jamie Foxx). On the day of his Secret Service job interview some very bad men (there will be no spoilers here!) invade the White House, disabling the security forces and gaining control of the president's home. Separated from his daughter, John gets some on-the-job training as he becomes POTUS' defacto guard while shooting, stabbing and fisticuffing his way to his daughter's rescue.

White House Down opens this weekend in theatres. HANDOUT

Reel Guys

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

Been there, bombed that

White House Down. The Jamie Foxx flick isn't your typical blow 'em up blockbuster but it doesn't do much to set itself apart either

Richard: Mark, unlike the virtually identical Olympus Has Fallen, the Gerard Butler White House disaster flick that opened earlier this year, White House Down spends half-an-hour of its sprawling 137 minutes introducing the characters, which is 29 minutes more than we got in Butler's film. There's loads and loads of not terribly interesting talking, then the dome blows off the White House and director Roland Emmerich's genius for making things go boom comes into play. From that point on, it's fun stuff.

Mark: And the question becomes which is the better flick? White House Down has bigger stars, more expensive production and more action than Olympus Has Fallen. But if we use plausibility as a guideline, I think Olympus has a bit of an edge. That film almost felt like an indie, and its relative cheapness worked for it. I'm not saying that White House Down isn't fun, but there were lots of times I just didn't believe it, starting with the idea that Jamie Foxx could be elected president. On the other hand, James Woods is very believable. Too believable, maybe.

RC: Woods does disgruntled very well. I won't say any more about Woods — there will be no spoilers here — but I can say that this is a talkier-than-usual action movie. But by and large the chit chat is entertaining. Best line in the movie? "That's President Sawyer, and he has a rocket launcher!" I loved that the cheese factor was ramped up to 11 for the last hour-and-a-half.

MB: Yes, I enjoyed that too. And there's a bit of comedy thrown in. Nicolas Wright is terrific as a White House guide with SNL timing. But the director, Roland Emmerich, may have some explaining to do. This is the second time he's blown up the White House (Independence Day being the first), and I'm no Freudian, but as a foreign national he may be receiving a visit from some Homeland Security in the near future.

RC: He's the master of disaster! He's never met a monument he didn't want to destroy. Whether it be bad weather à la The Day After Tomorrow or a worldwide cataclysm as in his global warming epic 2012, the director can't seem to stop himself from trashing beloved landmarks.

MB: I just heard there's a Canadian version of this film being produced where terrorists take over 24 Sussex Dr. and get into a bitter debate with the government over who pays the utility bills.

Johnny Depp, left, as Tonto in the Lone Ranger. HANDOUT

He's not a savage and you're not in India

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

The Lone Ranger may be the biggest western to come out of Hollywood in years, but it's not star Johnny Depp's first venture into the frontier.

In 1995, Depp starred as an out-of-his-depths city slicker in Jim Jarmusch's Dead Man — not that he's seen it. "I feel somehow that Jim Jarmusch made a great and amazing sort of epic poem of a western with Dead Man," Depp says. "Haven't seen the film, but I love Jim, and I know what he's capable of, and from what I've heard, it's — and I did read the script by the way, and it was — it was wonderful."

Now, about that Lone Ranger. In taking on the iconic character of Tonto in such an iconic property, Depp — who spearheaded and executive-produced the project — saw the Lone Ranger as a chance to reverse a lot of Hollywood's past mistakes. "In the history of cinema, the Native American has been portrayed as a savage or as something lesser than. And it was important to me to at least take a good shot at erasing that," he says.

On a more personal level, there's also the way Tonto himself — the Lone Ranger's stoic sidekick — had been portrayed. "As a very young child, I was always perturbed by the idea of Tonto being a sidekick. That just didn't register properly in my head," Depp explains. "I just thought it was potentially an opportunity to right the wrong, you know?"

And it's not just Hollywood's treatment of Native Americans that needs addressing, Depp insists. There are centuries of injustice and stereotypes he hopes his flashy summer blockbuster can help diminish. "I wanted to convey that the Native Americans were only deemed savages when Christopher Columbus hit the wrong f—ing place, and decided that he'd hit India," Depp says. "That's our history. He thought he hit India, and called the people Indians. That's our history, you know? I mean, that's pretty f—ing weird, seriously."

Kooky characters

Tonto versus Captain Jack

Tonto is another addition to Johnny Depp's coterie of kooky characters, including the Mad Hatter, Hunter S. Thompson and Edward Scissorhands. But perhaps the Grand Poobah of Depp's alter egos is Pirates of the Caribbean mainstay Captain Jack Sparrow. So between the rakish pirate and the wily Comanche warrior, who would win in a fight?

"It's over for Tonto," Depp says with a weary shake of his head. "Yeah, it's over for Tonto. Captain Jack is far too dark. It wouldn't take long and it would be unpleasant."

Main character of a Johnny Depp movie

Armie Hammer. Actor talks about cracking wise and his role in the Lone Ranger

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

Armie Hammer, left, in the Lone Ranger. HANDOUT

Armie Hammer doesn't have a future as a stand-up comic. Just minutes before I sit down for a chat with the Lone Ranger star, he attempted a joke in front of a packed press conference, Johnny Depp by his side. It did not go well.

"What do you call 64 Cherokee in a room?" he asked, interrupting Depp. "Full blood!" His punchline, unfortunately, was met with a frosty, confused silence. "That was told to me by a Comanche, so it's a safe joke," he offered.

So after that, I have to ask what your unsafe jokes are like.
Oh, no, no. I'm afraid I'm already going to get in enough trouble probably for that safe joke.

Did that feel like it didn't quite go over well?
I think it went over as best as could be expected. It's a cold room.

You're the title character here, but this is very much a Johnny Depp movie. Is there any ego-checking you need to do to get used to that idea?
He's been involved in this movie since 2006. I mean, if I actually went into it with the idea of, "I'm playing the Lone Ranger, this is my movie," then I probably would've had to go through some kind of process, but I was just happy to be there working. Even if they'd just been like, "You only have to work 50 days on this movie" — which I definitely didn't have to do, I had to work a s—load, but it was great, every minute of it.

You've got your classic western hero, plus you've done the all-American G-man in J. Edgar, the Harvard twins in the Social Network and Prince Charming in Mirror, Mirror. Are you worried at all about typecasting?
Not really. I think that's just how people see me, which is fine. I mean, I'm not complaining by any means. It looks like I've been doing OK with it in terms of getting jobs. I'm not worried about getting typecast because I don't really think about types when I choose a movie. For me it's just more important about who's involved.

Are there roles that are more against type for you that you've been dying to play?
I'm sure I could do that actor masturbatory thing of, "I'd love to get face tattoos and shave my head." I don't know, I'll take whatever job has a great director and a great script.

All about the chemistry

Meeting Armie Hammer, it's very, very hard not to like him. The man is charming, polite and intensely good-natured. Coincidentally, that's exactly how he feels about his Lone Ranger co-star, Johnny Depp. And it's those shared traits that create the chemistry between the Lone Ranger and Tonto necessary for the film to work. "I would say that it's 90 per cent just that we're both generally agreeable people and 10 per cent that almost everyone else that you deal with in this business sucks," Hammer says. "You can smell that s— when someone's working with someone they don't actually like."

Comic actress back 'on' in sequel

Despicable Me 2. Kristen Wiig talks about being shy off the clock, and missing Saturday Night Live

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

Kristen Wiig is trying to deal with the fact that she's always expected to be 'on.'

The comic actress and Saturday Night Live vet has made a name for herself with outlandish characters and hilarious writing, but she's actually quite shy and reserved when she's not on the clock. Unfortunately, when promoting a massive animated film like Despicable Me 2, that's not very often.

"I mean, in an interview situation I am aware that I'm being recorded and written about, so there's a kind of a persona you have to bring out a little bit," she admits. "I find that people who interview me expect probably more of a comedic personality than in real life."

Wrestling with those perceptions has perhaps gotten easier now that she's left SNL, where she became a standout over seven seasons with crazy characters like the Target Lady. She even enjoyed a touching kind of send-off — with each cast member and creator Lorne Michaels dancing with her during a final sketch — most other retiring SNL actors don't enjoy.

With a year's time now between Wiig and her tearful farewell from SNL, she admits she's finally getting used to not being on the sketch comedy mainstay.

"I do miss it," she admits. "It's getting easier now because they're on (summer]) hiatus. I don't imagine what they're doing — not in a creepy way, but just ... it was such a big part of my life for seven years and it was a transition to leave. But it's getting better."

For her new addition to the Despicable Me world, Wiig was given some touchstones from one of her famous predecessors to work with: She plays Lucy, a brassy, clumsy redhead — who reminds viewers more than a little of Lucille Ball — tasked with roping retired super-villain Gru (Steve Carell) into a mission. "That's all they gave me. 'Her name is Lucy, she has red hair, go!'" Wiig says with a laugh. "I had never played a character like that before that was so enthusiastic, I guess. She's very excited."

Lucy is also fairly fearless, a trait Wiig humbly declines to apply to herself. "Um … no," she laughs. "I don't know, in some ways, I guess. But I don't think anyone is 100 per cent fearless."

Gru (Steve Carell) attempts to understand his new partner, Lucy (Kristen Wiig), in Despicable Me 2, summer 2013's much-anticipated followup to Universal Pictures and Illumination Entertainment's blockbuster comedy adventure Despicable Me. HANDOUT

All the laughs

What makes Kristen funny

Through her time on Saturday Night Live and her jump to film with projects like Bridesmaids, Kristen Wiig has earned a legion of fans for her unique brand of humour. But just what is it that makes her so entertaining? Despicable Me 2 co-star Steve Carell breaks it down for us.

"Kristen to me is funny, and not to deconstruct Kristen's comedy, but she to me is really funny because you never see her trying to be funny," he says. "I think we're very similar in a sense that at a party or social situations we're not necessarily the funniest people in the room. It's just the two of us huddled in the corner whispering, 'How's it going?'"

Comedy/Crime

The Heat

Director. Paul Feig

Stars. Sandra Bullock, Melissa McCarthy

Sarah Ashburn (Oscar winner Sandra Bullock) is an uptight FBI agent teamed with tough-talking Boston street cop Shannon Mullins (Melissa McCarthy) to bring down a murderous drug dealer. This odd couple, buddy cop dynamic is as old as the movies, so you'd hope for the performances to breath new life into the film's withered lungs. Instead we get the same old from two good performers. With a gag to giggle ratio of about five-to-one, more jokes miss than hit. McCarthy tries hard to raise a smile but she doesn't do anything here we haven't seen her do before and better.

RICHARD CROUSE

Quoted

I have considered lots of times that after age 50, I will be retired as an actor; I have the idea that it is the moment to make more projects as a director or producer. And I have a rather large family—my children are becoming teenagers but yeah, I also want to tell other types of stories on the screen."

Justin case: Did Bieber bust out some black belt moves in 2012?

As if he didn't have enough current trouble dogging him, Justin Bieber's past is now coming back to haunt him. The singer is being sued for assault by a paparazzo over a May 2012 scuffle outside a Calabasas, Calif., shopping centre, according to TMZ. The photographer, Jose Hernandez Duran, claims that Bieber "physically attacked" him, leaping out of his car and hitting him with "a martial-arts-style kick" to Duran's midsection. The suit alleges that Bieber's then-girlfriend, Selena Gomez, put a stop to the incident and later apologized to Duran, saying, "I'm sorry, I don't know why he did that."

Family, friends and fans bid final ciao to Sopranos star

PAT HEALY
Metro World News

Jamie Lynn-Sigler, who played Tony's daughter Meadow on The Sopranos, sobbed in front of the Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine in New York City on Thursday morning at the funeral of James Gandolfini.

The New York Times reports that almost the entire cast of The Sopranos was there, including Edie Falco, Joe Pantoliano, Dominic Chianese, Steve Schirripa, Aida Turturro, Vincent Curatola and Michael Imperioli.

New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, Hilaria and Alec Baldwin, John Turturro, and David Chase were also on hand to say goodbye to the famed actor.

In a somewhat unheard of move, the public was also allowed to attend. The Times reports that two lines formed before the service: One for those who knew Gandolfini personally and one for those who didn't.

One of those waiting in that line was fan Gwen Gibbs, who drove from Kentucky to give her respects.

"I am not sure how to put it in words," she says. "He made the character of Tony Soprano feel like a real person, like someone you knew. When I heard he had died I hoped it was a hoax."

Do I hear a wedding, Bell? Time to set a date as Cali ditches Prop 8

Though they've been engaged for more than two years, Kristen Bell and Dax Shepard have made it clear that they had no plans to wed while their gay and lesbian friends couldn't, but with California's Proposition 8 dead and the federal Defense of Marriage Act ruled unconstitutional it looks like it's time to set a date. "They have been waiting for this day so they can officially wed," a rep for the couple tells E! News. "They are beyond thrilled for their friends in the gay community."

Make it Canadian

LIQUID ASSETS
Peter Rockwell

Hey, Canada, this is your long weekend. The one where you celebrate our great country with family, friends and grilled goodness.

Since this coming Monday is all about national pride, you all need to step up and fill your glass with some home-grown liquid.

It could be beer (there's a sea of amazing craft brews out there), it could be a spirit (think one of our classic Canadian whiskies) or, of course, a local wine.

Selection of our wines varies across the country. While there are some big national brands, the industry is really led by artisan winemakers producing smaller quantities of pretty fantastic juice that doesn't flow far from home.

Ontario's Henry of Pelham Winery has been an advocate for quality Canuck vino since the mid-'80s. Its 2011 Sibling Rivalry White ($12.95 to $16.99) is an irreverent New World wonder made from a blend of riesling, chardonnay and gewürztraminer.

The trio conspires to create an aromatic mix of fruit cocktail, citrus and subtle spice that rolls across the palate and makes for both an open-minded food partner and refreshing cocktail wine.

Whatever you may be drinking on July 1, make it Canadian! PRICES REFLECT RANGE ACROSS COUNTRY. SOME PRODUCTS MAY NOT BE AVAILABLE IN ALL PROVINCES.

Canada, keep your meat tangy this long weekend

Chicken drumettes are the thick meaty part of the wing; they almost look like a mini leg. Here, they star in a delicious Herb and Spice Marinated Barbecue Chicken Drumettes dish.

Chef Richard Julien added 10 per cent cream to the marinade to add moisture, which helps keep chicken from drying out on the grill. Serve with an extra thick tangy sour cream dip.

This recipe serves four. THE CANADIAN PRESS H/O

Ingredients

- 16 chicken drumettes (about 750 g/1 1/2 lb)
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) 10 per cent half-and-half cream
- 1/2 small onion, peeled
- 3 cloves garlic, peeled
- 7.5-cm (3-inch) piece of ginger, peeled and minced
- Zest and juice of 1 lemon (about 45 ml/3 tbsp of juice)
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) fresh cilantro leaves
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) butter, melted
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) each Dijon mustard, liquid honey and apple cider vinegar
- 10 ml (2 tsp) each ground cumin and coriander
- 5 ml (1 tsp) each ground turmeric and cayenne
- Salt and pepper, to taste

1. Pull skin off chicken drumettes; place in 20-cm (8-inch) square glass baking dish or similar size stainless-steel pan.

2. In food processor, combine, cream, onion, garlic, ginger, lemon zest and juice, cilantro, butter, mustard, honey, vinegar, cumin, coriander, turmeric, cayenne, salt and pepper; process until smooth. Pour marinade over chicken; cover and refrigerate for 2 hours to allow flavours to develop.

3. Heat grill to medium-high. Remove chicken from marinade and place on baking sheet lined with paper towels. Place chicken pieces on greased grill; reduce temperature to medium-low. Grill with lid down for 9 minutes, turn chicken over, close lid and grill for 8 minutes or until juices run clear from chicken when tested with a fork. CHEF RICHARD JULIEN OF CHEF LIVE! Canucks GM Mike Gillis will look to work some magic in trading goaltender Roberto Luongo. RICH LAM/GETTY IMAGES

GM's focus back on trading Luongo

NHL. Gillis tasked with finding another team to take high-priced goaltender amid salary-cap cutbacks

Now that new coach John Tortorella has been hired, Vancouver Canucks general manager Mike Gillis can try to complete a long-delayed project in conjunction with Sunday's NHL draft — trading goaltender Roberto Luongo.

"We're going to try and accomplish that goal," Gillis said this week. "We'll see what happens."

If other teams do not find the nine years remaining on Luongo's $64-million US contract onerous, his trade could help the Canucks acquire a veteran or some young talent in the form of prospects or draft picks. But Gillis will not be dealing from a position of strength.

Although Luongo's contract has a reasonable annual salary-cap hit of $5.3 million, clubs have to reduce their cap maximum to $64.3 million from about $70 million as part of the new collective-bargaining agreement. The Canucks will also be missing a key bargaining chip if they want to move Luongo, who must agree to waive his no-trade clause.

"I think it's a strong draft," said Gillis. "I think there's opportunity, but we don't have a second-round pick, because we traded it at the trade deadline to try and get stronger for the playoffs. That's a practice that I don't like, and I haven't liked, and I'm not sure what we can do with that."

The Canucks sent their second-round pick to the Dallas Stars for centre Derek Roy and minor-league defenceman Kevin Connauton. Roy produced just one point in the playoffs as the Canucks were swept in the first round by the San Jose Sharks.

NHL clubs head into this year's draft with significant change looming when the 2013-14 season begins. In addition to salary-cap challenges, teams must deal with the implications of realignment and tougher battles for prime playoff positions. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Alouettes spoil housewarming party in Winnipeg

The Montreal Alouettes were impolite guests at the official opening of Investors Group Field on Thursday, defeating the Winnipeg Blue Bombers 38-33 to open the CFL season.

The Alouettes rallied after surrendering a 14-0 lead they built early in the first quarter and had to come back in the fourth from a nine-point deficit.

Demond Washington's 80-yard punt return for a touchdown helped the Winnipeg Blue Bombers grab the lead in the third quarter and electrify the sellout crowd of 33,500.

This was the second game but also the official opening for the new $200-million stadium. The Bombers played their first exhibition game there June 12. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Judge denies Hernandez bail

Former New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez, charged with murder for what prosecutors say was the execution-style killing of a friend near his house, was denied bail on Thursday.

Hernandez's lawyer argued that his celebrity status means even if he wanted to flee he couldn't and that the case against him is circumstantial.

But Bristol County Assistant District Attorney Bill McCauley called the evidence in the June 17 slaying of Odin Lloyd overwhelming. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Messier resigns from post with Rangers

Mark Messier is leaving the New York Rangers organization after being passed over to replace fired head coach John Tortorella.

Messier, who had been a special assistant to Rangers general manager Glen Sather, announced Thursday in a statement that he is resigning in order to "expand the game of hockey in the New York area by developing the Kingsbridge National Ice Center."

However, he added that the Rangers' choice to hire veteran coach Alain Vigneault to be the new head coach wasn't a factor in his departure from the team.

"I would like to thank the New York Rangers and particularly Glen Sather for giving me the opportunity over the last four years to work with the Rangers," said Messier, who has no NHL coaching experience. "Although some will perceive this as a reaction to the coaching decision, nothing could be further from the truth. I completely respect the decision that was made and for all the reasons it was made. I harbour no hard feelings toward Glen or the Rangers."

Messier took his position as an assistant to Sather, who also serves as Rangers team president, in August 2009.

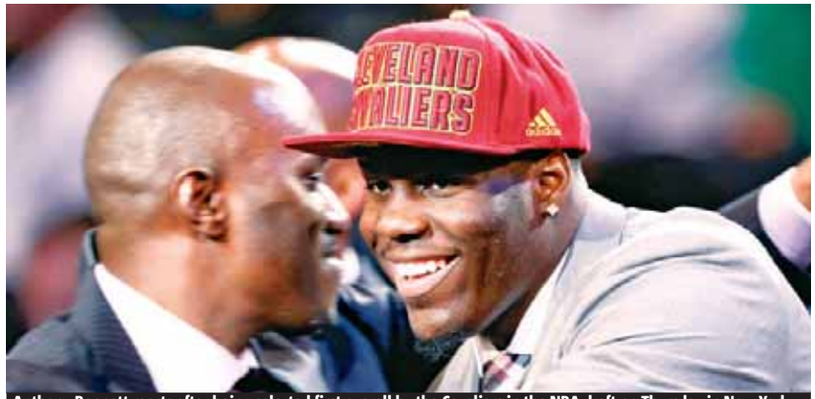
No. 1! Canadian Bennett shocks basketball world

NBA draft. Cleveland's Canadian love affair continues with pick of swingman 1st overall



Anthony Bennett reacts after being selected first overall by the Cavaliers in the NBA draft on Thursday in New York.
JASON DECROW/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Toronto's Anthony Bennett made Canadian basketball history Thursday, becoming the first player from north of the border to be selected first overall in the NBA draft.

The Cleveland Cavaliers stunned the league by selecting the UNLV freshman forward, who has starred for Canada's junior team and was the Mountain West Conference player of the year.

"I'm just as surprised as everybody else," Bennett said. "I didn't really have any idea who's going No. 1 or who was going No. 2. I heard everything was up for grabs. But I'm just real happy, glad that I have this opportunity, and I just got to thank God for everything."

Tristan Thompson of Toronto was selected No. 4 by the Cavaliers in the 2011 draft, making him the highest Canadian draft pick before Thursday. Teen phenom Andrew Wiggins of Thornhill, Ont., is projected to go first overall in 2014.

"Yeah. It's just crazy. Made history. I can't really complain about that," said Bennett, who had 25 to 30 family members with him in New York. "It's just like a long time dream that I had since I first started playing basketball, even though it was six or seven years ago. It's just crazy. Next year with Wiggins, hopefully he does well at Kansas. I'm rooting for him. I'm pretty sure he'll get that No. 1 spot."

Flood fuels Stamps' fire

The Calgary Stampeders have extra motivation to win their home opener against the B.C. Lions on Friday night.

Not only do the Stamps want to start the 2013 CFL season with a strong showing, they also want to win for their fans who have been affected by the devastating floods in southern Alberta.

"I'm ready to go out there and just give the stadium and the community something to be cheerful and happy about due to the flooding and everything with what's been going on," said Calgary kick returner/receiver Larry Taylor. "A lot of families are dealing with a lot of emotional things, being evacuated out of their places.

"Hopefully we can come out here and put on a good performance on Friday night and give the fans something to take their minds away from what they're dealing with personally."

Representatives from the Canadian Red Cross will be on hand at McMahon Stadium on Friday night to collect donations for the flood-relief effort.

"It has been an extremely difficult week for the city of Calgary and our hearts truly go out to all the people who have been displaced and affected by the flood," said Calgary coach and general manager John Hufnagel. "This is an incredibly challenging time for so many Calgarians. This football team is looking forward to providing a little boost to our city for a few hours Friday night at McMahon Stadium.

"I know the Stampeder fans are very avid fans that have been waiting for this all off-season."

B.C. coach Mike Benevides offered up his condolences to those who were affected by the flooding.

"I obviously want to let everybody in Calgary know that we're certainly thinking about them and our thoughts and prayers are with them," Benevides said. "My hope is (Friday) night we give them three hours of distraction and an exciting game." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Olynyk a Celtic

The Boston Celtics selected Kelly Olynyk of Gonzaga with the No. 13 pick in the NBA draft after making a trade with the Dallas Mavericks to move up three spots.

Boston sent the No. 16 pick and two future second-rounders to the Mavericks.

Olynyk averaged 17.8 points and 7.3 rebounds while shooting 63 per cent from the field while leading Gonzaga to a 32-3 season. The Kamloops native would join a team with no coach that is attempting to trade Kevin Garnett and Paul Pierce to Brooklyn.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
By all means, withdraw your support from a friend if they have let you down. It's not as if they weren't warned. You told them what would happen if they did not shape up.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
Life is full of surprises and over the next couple of days you will be amazed by some of the things that happen. While others are too shocked to act, find ways to cash in.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Where business and financial matters are concerned, you can and you must look on the bright side today. If you let negative thoughts take hold, almost inevitably it will lead to negative events occurring.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
It might be better to clear the air today than allow a feud of some kind to drag on. Most likely there is no "right" or "wrong" involved, it's just that you see things in different ways. Can't you accept that?

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
You don't have to conform to other people's standards just because they expect it of you. The only thing that matters is what you expect of yourself. Do what feels right and, if others don't like it, too bad.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
There are a few creative influences in your chart right now. Today, you need to decide what you're going to focus on. One thing done well is better than many things done poorly.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Make allowances for a friend's behaviour today. It is better to forgive and forget than make an issue of something you can't change. Besides, think of all the times they have forgiven you in the past.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
The more you search for a solution to a problem, the further away it seems to get. Maybe you should take the hint and stop looking so hard. Everything will work out for the best when the time is right.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Watch out you don't spend more than you can afford today. If you do feel the need to splash out on something costly, make sure there is a money-back guarantee — just in case you change your mind.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You could be more emotional than usual over the next 24 hours. Hide your sensitive feelings from critics, who will play on them if they think it might damage your rep.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may have every reason to be annoyed but you are also advised to keep your feelings to yourself as much as possible. Don't let your own behaviour become an issue.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Let the world know what your opinions are, even if they are largely at odds with the way most people view things. The masses are easily manipulated but you have never followed the herd. SALLY BROMPTON

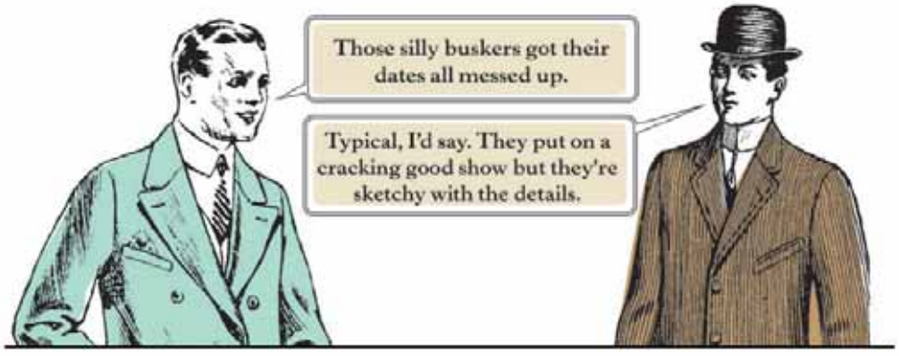
VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL

BUSKER FESTIVAL

GREAT FAMILY FUN

CANADA DAY WEEKEND JUNE 29 – JULY 1ST



Those silly buskers got their dates all messed up.
Typical, I'd say. They put on a cracking good show but they're sketchy with the details.
